REAR ADMIRAL ALFRED T. MANNING, USN

Alfred Thomas Manning was born at West Point on 27 September 1860. At the age of 16 he received the Naval Academy's training and entered the active list as ensign and subsequently passed exams. From 1881 to 1885 he served aboard ships in the Caribbean, on Arctic cruises and on blockade duty off South Carolina.

In 1895 Manning, commanding force, Division of the newly formed Naval War College, ordered Captain Manning to join the teaching staff to direct the work in strategy and tactics and to lecture in naval history. This new assignment proved to be a significant training point in his life. His lectures, drawing contemporary ideas and a comparison of the lessons taught by history, proved to be immensely popular with the officers in attendance. These lectures, only lightly revised, appeared in 1900 under the title of The Principles of Maritime Operations. (1888-1926), a distinguished work moving through the ranks to the general staff school to serve in the education of naval world leaders. The publication of this book through Admiral Manning's instruction, inspiration and force. He continued as professor, lecturer and distinguished writer of nautical literature until his death in 1928.
